President Obama has signed into law amendments to the Toxic Substances Control Act ("TSCA"). This move, coming after bipartisan efforts in Congress to reform the forty-year-old law, provides authority for the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency ("EPA") to evaluate new and existing chemicals against new, risk-based standards that take into account impacts on vulnerable populations. The EPA also has new authority to require chemical testing and information collection, and new funding to carry out these responsibilities. A Congressional compromise limiting federal preemption of state programs paved the way for today’s signing.

Click here to read O’Melveny’s complete summary of the legislation, as it was approved by Congress.

This memorandum is a summary for general information and discussion only and may be considered an advertisement for certain purposes. It is not a full analysis of the matters presented, may not be relied upon as legal advice, and does not purport to represent the views of our clients or the Firm. Eric Rothenberg, an O’Melveny partner licensed to practice law in New York, Kelly McTigue, an O’Melveny partner licensed to practice law in California, and Bob Nicksin, an O’Melveny counsel licensed to practice law in California, contributed to the content of this newsletter. The views expressed in this newsletter are the views of the authors except as otherwise noted.

Portions of this communication may contain attorney advertising. Prior results do not guarantee a similar outcome. Please direct all inquiries regarding New York’s Rules of Professional Conduct to O’Melveny &
President Obama has signed into law amendments to the Toxic Substances Control Act ("TSCA"). This move, coming after bipartisan efforts in Congress to reform the forty-year-old law, provides authority for the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency ("EPA") to evaluate new and existing chemicals against new, risk-based standards that take into account impacts on vulnerable populations. The EPA also has new authority to require chemical testing and information collection, and new funding to carry out these responsibilities. A Congressional compromise limiting federal preemption of state programs paved the way for today's signing.

Click here to read O'Melveny's complete summary of the legislation, as it was approved by Congress.

This memorandum is a summary for general information and discussion only and may be considered an advertisement for certain purposes. It is not a full analysis of the matters presented, may not be relied upon as legal advice, and does not purport to represent the views of our clients or the Firm. Eric Rothenberg, an O'Melveny partner licensed to practice law in New York, Kelly McTigue, an O'Melveny partner licensed to practice law in California, and Bob Nicksin, an O'Melveny counsel licensed to practice law in California, contributed to the content of this newsletter. The views expressed in this newsletter are the views of the authors except as otherwise noted.

Portions of this communication may contain attorney advertising. Prior results do not guarantee a similar outcome. Please direct all inquiries regarding New York's Rules of Professional Conduct to O'Melveny & Myers LLP, Times Square Tower, 7 Times Square, New York, NY, 10036, Phone:+1-212-326-2000. © 2016 O'Melveny & Myers LLP. All Rights Reserved.