Jeffrey Fisher, one of the nation's leading Supreme Court practitioners and scholars, represents clients in high-stakes litigation involving a wide range of civil and criminal issues. He has argued over three dozen cases in the Court—including 12 in the previous four Terms. Over the past several years, Jeff was also found in a recent study to have the highest rate of obtaining grants of certiorari of any member of private bar.

His successes include several landmark decisions. Among them:

- Jam v. Int'l Fin. Corp., in which the Court addressed the International Organizations Immunities Act (IOIA) for the first time;
- Riley v. California, in which the Court for the first time applied the Fourth Amendment's protections against unreasonable searches to digital information on smart phones;
- Crawford v. Washington and Melendez-Diaz v. Massachusetts, in which he persuaded the Court to adopt a new approach to the Sixth Amendment's Confrontation Clause;
- Endrew F. v. Douglas County Sch. Dist., in which the Court established the substantive standard for enforcing the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act; and
- Pena-Rodriguez v. Colorado, in which the Court held that that the Constitution requires courts to consider juror testimony regarding deliberations when racial bias may have been a significant motivating factor in the decision to convict.

In addition, Jeff was co-counsel for the plaintiffs in the historic marriage equality case Obergefell v. Hodges, in which the Court
