Vino Jayaraman is an experienced litigator who represents clients in a wide range of complex business litigation, including mass torts, unfair competition, and related commercial litigation. He regularly advises pharmaceutical companies on their most complex class action and product liability cases, and has otherwise represented mass media companies, celebrities, and financial institutions. Vino has worked with these clients in state and federal courts through all phases of litigation, including pleadings, discovery, and trial. He continues to represent an international pharmaceutical and medical device company and its subsidiaries in state AG litigations concerning the company's opioid products, and was a critical member of the company's trial team that achieved a full defense victory against allegations brought by localities in California.

Prior to law school, Vino worked as a pharmacology researcher at Mount Sinai Medical Center in New York, and co-authored multiple articles published in scientific journals.
