Seth Baglin represents domestic and multinational companies in commercial, derivative, and complex litigation. He counsels clients in a variety of sectors, including technology and telecommunications, food and beverage, banking, health care, and insurance. Seth also defends clients in regulatory proceedings and congressional and grand jury investigations. Additionally, Seth maintains a pro bono practice.

Whether working with a Fortune 100 company or a governmental agency, Seth immerses himself in his clients' industries and markets to understand their unique requirements. Looking beyond the specific matter at hand, he also helps his clients take a stronger stance against—and to prevent—potential litigation.

Experience

- Representing a global technology and telecommunications company as well as its officers and directors in a shareholder class action and related derivative litigation alleging that the company issued false and materially misleading statements to investors concerning the company's revenue and artificially inflated the price of company stock
- Serving as coordinating discovery counsel for a Fortune 100 food and beverage company, and defending the same client in a variety of different complex litigations and regulatory proceedings in various jurisdictions, including a series of consumer class actions challenging the labeling and advertising of health and nutrition claims
