Partner Lisa Monaco, who formerly served as Homeland Security and Counterterrorism Advisor to President Obama, was quoted in this CNN article analyzing future risks to the US following the death of a prominent ISIS leader.

“The FBI will be increasing surveillance on individuals on their radar as ISIS followers, and will likely increase attention to social media platforms,” said Monaco. “The bottom line is this is a great day for the US national security community and the unrelenting focus of counterterrorism professionals. But they also know that the ideology does not die with Baghdadi, and we have to remain vigilant.”
