New York Times Details O'Melveny's Participation in Firearms Task Force

December 07, 2016

The December 7, 2016, New York Times article "Gun Control Advocates Find a Deep-Pocketed Ally in Big Law" detailed O'Melveny's work with the Firearms Accountability Counsel Task Force, which brings together a group of attorneys from large law firms offering their services pro bono on gun control matters.

"This coalition brings together more resources, more brainpower, and more lawyers dedicated to making our clients and our nation safer," said Charlie Lifland, the O'Melveny partner leading the firm's work with the coalition.

Based in Los Angeles, Lifland focuses on class action and appellate work in the fields of mass torts, antitrust and unfair business practices, securities and consumer fraud, and punitive damages.
