O'Melveny Makes Debut On GCR's New York Survey

January 13, 2012

In its first appearance on Global Competition Review's (GCR) annual New York survey, O'Melveny & Myers LLP's Antitrust and Competition Practice's impressive results earned the Firm a listing in the "Recommended" category.

In its January 6, 2012, article titled, "New York's Finest," GCR wrote: "The O'Melveny team has made an impressive showing in New York, especially in the litigation matters that are the practice's bread and butter. The New York antitrust office has taken on major cases for clients that would be the envy of some city's larger practices. Some of these are independently run, while others include Washington, DC, superstar partner Richard Parker. The team's docket includes work for financial industry companies that are the backbone of the New York economy, including Bank of America and Capital One Financial. Other clients include Honeywell International, FedEx and Aveta."

"There was a time when the New York antitrust bar was really dominated by a few big New York firms, and antitrust was more New York centered than Washington, DC, centered," said Antitrust and Competition Practice Group partner Andrew Frackman, who leads the practice team in the New York office. "But now, that's not the case."
