O'Melveny's Donilon Noted for Contributing To Report on Chronic Diseases in New York Times

December 04, 2014

O'Melveny & Myers' Tom Donilon was recognized by the New York Times for contributing to a Council on Foreign Relations-sponsored report on making chronic diseases a priority in global health funding. The report shows that the rates of heart disease, cancer, diabetes, and other diseases are increasing in lower-income countries and are having worse outcomes in wealthier countries.

Donilon, a co-chair of the task force responsible for the report, is a partner in O'Melveny's Washington, DC Office and a Vice Chair of the Firm.
