O'Melveny's Lash Co-Authors Law360 Article on Professionalizing Pro Bono Services

February 09, 2015

O'Melveny & Myers counsel David Lash co-authored the February 9, 2015, Law360 article, "The Case for Professionalizing Pro Bono Services." According to the authors, the professionalization of pro bono work has become "the single most creative and effective improvement in the delivery of legal services" to those in need. "Recognizing the value of professionalizing this aspect of the legal profession is changing the lives of clients, changing the service delivery model, and influencing the culture of law firms in ways that only now are beginning to be seen," the authors submit.

Lash serves as managing counsel for O'Melveny's pro bono and public interest services and resides in the Firm's Los Angeles and Century City offices.
