O'Melveny's report on DC Councilman Jack Evans is cited in this opinion piece by Colbert King, which urges the rest of the council to avoid "foot-dragging" in upcoming proceedings regarding his ethics violations.

While Evans maintains his innocence, he is now facing the "report from O'Melveny & Myers, the law firm hired by the D.C. Council — which in 97 pages cites 11 instances of his violating ethics rules by taking action that helped his employers or clients, who paid him more than $400,000," Colbert writes in the article.
