Lash Invited to Speak on Roadmap to Justice Project at Stanford Law School

March 27, 2009

O'Melveny counsel David Lash has been invited to attend a conference at Stanford Law School to discuss "The Roadmap to Justice Project" on March 27. The event, limited to about 40 attendees, draws academicians, lawyers, judges, and business pioneers nationwide to create an action plan for greater access to civil justice for the majority of Americans.

Over the past 25 years, national spending on legal assistance has been cut by one-third, with stronger restrictions being placed on which cases and clients qualify for government-funded programs. Roadmap to Justice is a joint undertaking of Stanford University's Center on the Legal Profession and the Sokolove Charitable Fund. The Project aims to increase public awareness through action in the for-profit, non-profit, and legal sectors.
