Overview

Since establishing a “foreign legal consultant office” in Seoul* in 2012 following the opening of the Korean legal market, O’Melveny has ranked among the most active international law firms in the country, representing clients in sectors such as antitrust investigation, patent litigation, and mergers and acquisitions.

Indeed, our Seoul office was a natural outgrowth of the important work we handle for our Korean clients, providing us the space and technology to connect them with O’Melveny attorneys around the world. From defending Korean clients in high-stakes, US-based “make or break” intellectual property or class action litigation to navigating global antitrust and competition issues involving Korean parties to sophisticated M&A, restructurings, financings, and other corporate transactions in the Korea market, O’Melveny’s team offers the dedicated resources, deep experience, and breadth of service to achieve important goals for our clients, which include some of the most high-profile companies in Korea.

Accolades

"With its national coverage and depth of expertise, the firm's bet-the-company labor and employment litigation practice is very well known."

Renowned Korea practitioners Youngwook Shin and YongSang Kim are residents of the Seoul office. Hong Kong-based Jae Wan Chi is bringing unique experience and wisdom from decades of experience as in-house counsel at one of the world's largest companies. Los Angeles-based partner Joseph Kim, Chair of O'Melveny's Korea Practice, oversees the Korea practice and works closely with Seoul office attorneys as well as many other O'Melveny attorneys who work on Korea-related matters.
