O'Melveny partner David Marroso was quoted in this article discussing the fallout of the Houston Astros cheating scandal.

“Los Angeles attorney David Marroso, a sports and entertainment litigator at O'Melveny & Myers, told Corporate Counsel that when any company dismisses a prominent member of the staff, there is always a risk of litigation,” the article reported.

If litigation were to follow, Marroso told Corporate Counsel, “in this case and these circumstances, it could be important whether the Astros negotiated ‘integrity of the game’ or morals clauses with Hinch and Jeff Luhnow and the language of those clauses in their employment contracts.”
