The American Lawyer reported that O'Melveny is among a group of law firms pledging to fight against racial injustice. The firm will “donate to three organizations committed to racial injustice,” the article observed. It also quoted firm chair Bradley Butwin, who cited the firm’s efforts to build on our history of providing pro bono support to the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, the Lawyers’ Committee for Civil Rights Under Law, Protect Democracy, and other organizations on vital matters dealing with voting rights, access to justice, equality in education and criminal justice reform.”
