O'Melveny White Collar Defense & Corporate Investigations practice co-chair and former US deputy solicitor general Michael Dreeben spoke with Law360 about the US Supreme Court's momentous Term, which saw the justices simultaneously navigate the coronavirus pandemic and highly political cases. "The court stepped up to the moment and displayed remarkable flexibility and versatility," said Dreeben, who has made more than 100 arguments before the Supreme Court in his career. "The court had to step into a new role in conducting oral arguments without seeing the advocates and without seeing, at least as far as the public knows, their colleagues while they did it."
